_TZEDAKAH FOR PASSOVER_

On Mitzvah Day 2006, Temple families were given “Tzedakah Banks” to encourage them to collect the loose change that accumulates so easily throughout the week. This project was developed to complement our “Emanu-El Reads” program, which focuses this year on the life and work of Moses Maimonides—physician, philosopher and one of the greatest commentators in Jewish tradition.

Among Maimonides’ many notable concepts is that of the “Tzedakah Ladder,” so named for encouraging multiple levels of being responsive to the needs of others—including such a simple gesture as collecting loose change.

To honor Maimonides as physician and philosopher, our collection will be used to purchase much needed medical equipment for Schneider Children’s Medical Center of Israel. Banks should be returned to the lobby of One East 65th Street between April 4 and April 15. (Religious School families may return banks to the lobby of 10 East 66th Street.) If you need an empty bank to start your collection, pick one up in the 65th Street lobby.

OON, ON THE SAME NIGHT, we all will be looking into the same book of prayers, but we won’t be at a prayer service. We will be at the Passover Seder. The Haggadah is the prayer book of service at the Seder table and one of the most important examples of the development of Jewish prayer.

From the familiar repeated blessing over the wine—borei pri hagafen (blessing “the creator of the fruit of the vine”)—to the well-known song Mah nishtanah ha-lilah ha-zeh (“Why is this night different from all other nights?”), the Haggadah was the subject of many debates from the early Rabbinic period (first century CE) through that of the Geonic period (eighth–11th centuries CE) and even until today. Scholars estimate the existence of more than 500 different published Haggadot, many of which include alternative versions of prayers and songs. Consequently, what is one of the most traditional and most observed rituals of the Jewish people also sets the context for the greatest experimentation.

While one might assume that the tendency to change prayers is a modern phenomenon, it should be noted that the sages of the Geonic period (the Geonim who were the singular, powerful legal decision makers of the age) debated changes in the prayers. Hai Gaon (998–1038 CE), for example, allowed for a practice by certain groups that changed the simple blessing over the wine to “who creates new wine which makes God and humanity happy.” Thus, a change to a blessing that alters its very structure is in some circumstances permissible, even by the strictest of legal thinkers. Today, changes to the prayers in some communities are significantly more far reaching.

While the main Reform Haggadah of North America abbreviates some passages, it retains the classical order, structure and form of all the blessings. Other Haggadot, however, replace the opening of the traditional blessing form (“Blessed are You, Adonai our God, Sovereign of the Universe…” ) with “Let us bless the source of all life…” or “Blessed is the Shekhinah…” (the feminine aspect of God).

In addition to these more universal and feminist liturgical possibilities, many contemporary Haggadot include and emphasize the story of the Hebrew midwives in Egypt who helped the Israelite women give birth. Some mention the role of Miriam in saving Moses, who would then help save the Israelite people from enslavement. Many people today, in addition to Elijah’s cup, have a Kos Miriam (Miriam’s cup) filled with water to symbolize the well of water that accompanied the Israelites through their desert journey while Miriam was alive.

As we prepare for Passover, we are not unlike the sages of old, making choices about what to include in our Haggadah, what prayers to add and in which rituals to engage. We, too, decide what is “in” and what is “out”—challenging ourselves and the communities gathered around our tables to determine the future of Passover prayers.

Rabbi Rachel Sabath Beit-Halachmi, a founding faculty member of the Skirball Center for Adult Jewish Learning at Temple Emanu-El, is a member of the faculty at the Shalom Hartman Institute and HUC-JIR in Jerusalem.
