Rabbi Nathan A.
Perilman Memorial Sermon-Lecture

Temple Emanu-El is pleased to welcome Rabbi Aaron D. Panken, Ph.D., dean at the New York campus of Hebrew Union College-Jewish Institute of Religion (HUC-JIR), who will be this year's guest preacher at the annual Rabbi Nathan A. Perilman Memorial Sermon-Lecture.

An alumnus of the Wexner Graduate Fellowship, Rabbi Panken earned his doctorate in Hebrew and Judaic studies at New York University, where his research focused on legal change in Talmudic and Midrashic literature. In addition to teaching Rabbinic and Second Temple literature at HUC-JIR, Rabbi Panken is active in several major Jewish organizations, including the Wexner Foundation, Taglit-birthright israel and the New Israel Fund.

This annual event is named for Dr. Nathan Perilman, who served Congregation Emanu-El from 1932 until his retirement in 1973. In 1982, the congregation established this lectureship in honor of the 50th anniversary of Dr. Perilman's ordination. The lecture is presented each year in the form of a Sabbath morning sermon. LO TIGNOV: YOU SHALL NOT STEAL

By Rabbi Rachel Sabath Beit-Halachmi

THE TEN COMMANDMENTS are among Judaism's most important gifts to humanity. Repeated in two different places in the Torah—Exodus and Deuteronomy—the 10 utterances communicate succinctly what it means to be a Jew and a human being. Each commandment contains in it a world of moral and religious meaning. Each one is a foundation of the Judeo-Christian civilizations that later gave birth to all that is good and moral about our cultures.

The first five commandments, as many Sages have noted, focus on the duties of a Jew vis-à-vis God, while the second five focus on one's responsibilities to other human beings—including the commandment not to murder, nor to bear false witness against one's neighbor. The eighth commandment, "You Shall Not Steal," falls precisely between the prohibition against committing adultery and that of bearing false witness. Society, the Bible teaches, cannot function without these basic principles of human decency. And yet, somehow, everyday, it does.

Not stealing—taking property that belongs to another—is central to a socio-religious code of ethics because of what it teaches, like much of Western law, about the importance of respecting ownership. The idea of possession in Judaism, however, is not simply a socially necessary construct; it has sacred significance.

Our tradition teaches that when we receive something new, we bless it. When we acquire a new article of clothing or build a new house, the Talmud (TB Berachot 59b) instructs us to recite the Sh'hechyanu blessing now familiar to many: "Blessed are you,

Adonai
Our God, Sovereign of the Universe, who has kept us alive and sustained us and brought us to this season."

When we possess something new—gain new property—it is a symbol of God's goodness. Therefore, to take something that belongs to someone else is to steal from them God's blessing. To steal God's blessing is an affront to God.

AND MOSES CALLED UNTO ALL ISRAEL,
AND SAID UNTO THEM:
HEAR, O ISRAEL,
THE STATUTES AND
THE ORDINANCES WHICH I SPEAK IN YOUR EARS
THIS DAY, THAT YE MAY LEARN THEM, AND OBSERVE TO DO THEM.

— DEUTERONOMY 5:1

Interestingly, the Talmud specifies that when one shares ownership, one doesn't say the Sh'hechyanu blessing but rather: "Blessed is He who is good and does good." In other words, what we have is not solely because of what we have earned or done, or deserved, but rather because God is good and God does good. God's goodness is what brings property and establishes ownership. Therefore, to steal another's property is to attempt to redistribute God's goodness and to change what God has established. In other words, stealing is a kind of overblown hubris, or even an attempt to be God because it is an attempt to compete with God's goodness and to dislodge what God has distributed.

Thus, we are commanded: "You Shall Not Steal," which reminds us that just as we human beings are not like God—who determines the beginning and end of life—neither are we like God, who determines the blessings that each of us receive. None but God can give us blessing, and no human being may take it from us.

FACES OF EMANU-EL

KWAI MAN MA
Production and Distribution Coordinator

Walking past the door of Kwai Man Ma's office on the seventh floor, it's not uncommon to hear the strains of classical violin or piano airing from a small radio that sits in a corner. "I'm a recent convert to classical music," Ma says. "Beethoven and Brahms are my favorites." A native of Hong Kong, Ma, 45, came to the United States in 1985 to attend college. While studying for an accounting degree at New York City's Baruch College, Ma in 1987 began working a weekend shift at the front desk of the Marvin and Elisabeth Cassell Community House—a secondary job he held until last year. Then, in July 2005, Ma was asked to become a full-time member of the Temple's administrative staff to oversee coordination of all congregation mailings. In addition, because of his excellent computer skills—he's a true whiz!—he also works on membership database issues.

"From the weekly bulletin to auxiliary mailings, its not unusual for 5,000 to 7,000 printed items to pass through here in a given week," says Temple Administrator Mark Heutlinger. "No matter how many projects we give Mr. Ma, he handles them with proficiency and grace." The switch to employment in the nonprofit sector was something Ma accepted readily. "It's very different from a business organization ...It's much more people friendly," he says. "And, if your business is not doing well, you don't have peace of mind. At my age, peace of mind and job security are very important."

"Faces of Emanu-El" is a periodic feature highlighting the people who help to make our Temple such a special place.
